Reenvisioning the Arts of Oceania

Experiencing constellations

The Met's galleries devoted to Oceanic art were opened in 1982 as part of the newly built Michael C. Rockefeller Gallery. This installation marked a radical expansion of the galleries by the Museum and has celebrated the cultural contributions of Pacific artists and innovators for the past forty years. We have embarked on an exciting new project to overhaul the content and physical footprint of these galleries, updating them to serve as crossroads for a new generation. Preparation work for these improvements are now underway.

The largest geographical area on the planet, covering nearly one-third of the earth's surface, a vast region of diversity that continues to capture the imagination and mobility of Oceanic peoples across this expansive continent. A catalyst for the flourishing of a kaleidoscopic range of more than 1,800 groups linked in a dynamic network of encounter, and ancestral connections. The new galleries present 500 years of art from this unique region, showcasing the creativity of Pacific artists through the compelling history, indigenous storytelling, oratory, and performance.

Learn more about the renovation on The Met website.
